passing water; and so slight is the retard-ing influence of the screw thus disengaged, that there is every reason to expect a sall-ing speed fully equal to the possibilities of screws and the incidental division of motive force.

The essential reasons for the construction of vessels of the composite type are that they are largely independent of docking facilities and economical in the use of fuel. The exfoliation of the copper causes the barnacles, grass, etc., to be released just as soon as the vessel is put in motion, and the bottom is made comparatively clean, thus permitting the vessel to maintain her designed speed with a minimum consumption of coal.

The character of the services for which these gunboats are particularly designed requires that they be exposed to musketry fire, and the housing of the major part of the battery by an unbroken deck, besides adding materially to the stiffness and strength of the vessels, gives admirable protection to the study creating in action adding materially to the stiffless and strength of the vessels, gives admirable protection to the guns' crews in action. The necessarily exposed position of the how and the stern guns is justified only by their arc of fire and possible usefulness in a running action; while for river service, for which these boats are particularly fitted, the disposition of the gun deck battery is all that could be desired.

BLOOMERS OR SKIRTS! Some Pretty Frank Talk at a Wis

From the Chicago Inter-Ocean. A correspondent writing from Delayan Wis., notes the arrival of the "cycliste" there in great numbers. She is of all ages and sizes and of three distinct types, namely, the one who wears bloomers, the one who wears "knicks" and the one who charming young woman, who has one of the prettiest homes at the lake, said she wore a skirt because in her north side set nothing else would be tolerated. Another delightful girl said she wore a skirt because the man she was engaged to wouldn't ride with her in bloomers.

The dearest girl of all was still more explicit: "I wear a skirt because nothing else seems quite so ladylike. To say the bloomer seems quite so ladylike. To say the bloomer is the only safe cycling costume is exaggerating, I think. I have been riding two years in a skirt, and haven't had an accident yet. And, anyway, I'd rather take a header every time I go out than have the men comment on my appearance the way my brothers do on the girls in bloomers."

She wore the jauntlest, smartest cycling costume imaginable. Tan skirt, nearly dust color, leather trimmed, to the shoetops; tan shirt waist, tan shoes, tan leggings, tan wash-leather gloves, coquettish saflor hat, with tan leather band, and a silk-lined tan coat strapped to the handlebar. The skirt was moderately full in front, and fell in graceful lines when she was riding.

and fell in graceful lines when she was riding.

"Isn't this skirt all right?" she asked.

"The road to Delavan is sometimes dusty, and if I wore bloomers I'd be a sight."

A bloomer girl came into the hotel dining room, looking big and blowsy. Out on the lawn, with her wheel by her side, she would not have looked so fantastic, but in the dining hall, surrounded by women, she was a spectacle. A clubman was asked:

"Doesn't that require an extreme amount of nerve?"

of nerve?"
"Not so much of the woman, I fancy, as of the man with her," he replied.
"Would you ride with her?" he was asked.
"Ride with her!" he said. "If she were my wife I'd get a divorce."
Eloomers are not popular among the men here. One man's concise reply expresses the consensus of opinion: "Bloomers are all right on some other fellow's girl."

A Difference. From the New York Observer.

Some one, of a sarcastic turn of mind, no doubt, says that in times gone by the saints occupied hardwood seats in their plain sanctuaries, and sang "My God, the Spring of All My Joys." Then all the people sang. Now the worshipers sit on soft cushions in elegant edifices, while the choir sings for them or to them, "Art Thou Weary, Art Thou Languid?"

NOTAPLE HORSEBACK RIDE.

Not long ago The Star writer had occasion to visit western Missouri. Among one of the traditions of the little city of Independence, which until the days of the rallroad was the eastern terminus of the Santa Fe trail, the following story was In the old days of the Santa Fe trail the were made up, the wagons loaded and the

from Independence in the early spring and winding up his second round trip at that point rather late in the fall. Aubrey piled up a great deal of money at the business, and set such an energetic example that he was soon recognized as the leader.

With all his business thrift and vigor, Aubrey was also what one might call "a sporting character." The distance from Santa Fe to Independence was about 800 miles. One day while discussing freighting and the length of time it ought to take to cover the distance between Independence and Santa Fe, Aubrey made the rather bold assertion that he could start alone on a single horse and push through to Independence in eight days himself. A dispute arose, end the result was that Aubrey offered to wager $5,000 that he could start on a thoroughbred horse he had, of unusual speed £rd bottom, and with the liberty to buy such horses as he might need on the way, and & remount himself as often as he had a chance, and be in Independence at the stage station in less than eight days of twenty-four hours each from the time he said "good-bye" to Santa Fa. He had remounted himself twice.

Aubrey started and was in Independence, Mo., in just seven days and ten hours from the time he said "good-bye" to Santa Fa. He had remounted himself twice.

Then a second wager was made. The parties who had lost the $5,000 with the bold New Yorker, after considerable diokering, managed to make a wager of $10,000 a side with Aubrey. This time he was to go from Santa Fe to Independence, a run of full 800 miles, in six days.

It was at the best season of the year. There were no rains, while the grass was good and the trail as hard as a pavement, Aubrey had the same liberty to remount himself as often as he came upon a horse that he preferred to his own. But he was horse in advance along the trail. Indeed, he had no time wherein to make these ary rangements, even if he had desired to and they had been allowed.

He started out of Santa Fe the evening of a June day. It was Sunday. The Mexicans looking on argued
